GENERAL JOE GEIGER.

Two Stories About the Ugliest Man in the State of Ohio. Two Stories About the Ugliest Man in the State of Ohio.

There is another story told as original on quaint old Joe Geiger, says the Washington Post. He has always been known as the ugliest man in Ohio, and prided himself on this distinctive and superlative title. It is not every man who can achieve a superlative. When he was campaigning for the Republicans down on the big Darby he was introduced as the ugliest man in Ohio. His fame, both in this respect and as a great joker, had preceded him, of course. A village joker, who was no prize beauty himself, arose when Joe was introduced, and, pointing a pistol at him, said: "I made a solemn vow many years ago that if I ever met a man uglier than myself I would kill him."

Joe looked at him a second and exclaimed:
"Bhoot, for God's sake, shoot! If I am ugher than you are I want to die!"
Another story about Joe relates to his habit when he was speechmaking of having something in the way of a "stimilent" on his desk to partake of during his efforts.
He used to have a private engagement with his agent by which some gin was put in his pitcher, which he would pour out as pure, unadulterated water, so far as appearances went.

Once when he was about to open up to a large audience in Mansfield, which included John Sherman, one of those busybodies who make themselves prominent on crowded occasions bustled up and took the prepared pitcher.

"I'll get you some fresh water, General," he said, effusively.

"No. no!" explaimed the General in great.

"No, no!" exclaimed the General in great arm. "That water is all right. I don't slarm. "That water is all right. I don't like fresh water."

"But this has been standing here some time," said the fiend, "and is stale. It won't take me but a moment, General."
"Please leave that water," begged the General, in an agonized voice, "I love stale water; I love it real stale and warm. That water isn't warm and stale enough. Fresh water makes my head ache. Please leave water makes my head ache. Please leave it. Don't trouble yourself, I beg of you." "Oh, no trouble at all," said the flend, cheerfully, and away he went for fresh water, followed by the General's eye, which had an expression embracing the glare of the eye of a tiger thirsting for blood and the look that is never seen in the human eye except when despair is in the heart.

The General can never tell the story without a shudder, and always concludes it by asserting his belief that it was a job put up on him by Sherman.

MR: BRIGHT'S COOLNESS.

The Great Commoner's Meeting with Rabid Tory Clergyman.

The following incident is related by the London St. James' Gazette on the authority of W. L. Bright, M. P.: "Mr. Bright went into an agricultural district one day, and he had to walk from the station a long way into the village. On the way a clergyman who was driving in a dog-cart came up to who was driving in a dog-cart came up to him, and the two men passed the time of day. The clergyman offered to drive Mr. Bright into the village, and Mr. Bright accepted the offer. The clergyman was a Tory, and he had been reading a speech Mr. Bright had made the previous night; and turning to Mr. Bright he said: 'Have you seen the paper to-day, sir?' 'Yes,' said Mr. Bright. 'What's in them?' 'Why, that rascal John Bright has been making another speech.' 'And what was it about?' asked Mr. Bright. 'Why, so and so and so, and so. Mr. Bright. 'Why, so-and-so and so-and-so,' and he went on to relate the incidents of the epeech. Then they discussed the topic, and Mr. Bright said: 'Well, it is just possible that Mr. Bright may have been right, and that he was only expressing his honest con-victions. There may be something in it.' Oh, no, there can't be, 'said the irate clergyman. 'If I had him here, I'd feel just like shooting him.' Neither revealed his identity, but before they separated the clergyman invited Mr. Bright to go to his church next morning and Mr. Bright promise. church next morning, and Mr. Bright promised to go. And he kept his word, as he always did. The cleryman took for his theme Mr. Bright's speech, and at the conclusion Mr. Bright thanked him for his very able sermon. As he was going home to dinner a friend of the clergyman met him and said: 'You have been preaching under distinguished patronage this morning, then.' 'No,' said the clergyman. 'Uh, yes, you have,' said the friend. 'You had John Bright among the congregation. You must have noticed him in the front in the middle pew. I know him perfectly well, and I assure you it was Mr. Bright.' 'Why,' said the clergyman, 'I drove him to the village yesterday in my dog-cart, and called him a rascal and execrated him in all the moods and tenses, and he never said a word. He kept perfectly calm and cool. I have insulted him. I must go and apologize at through a microscope which had been treated to this luxurious process. Why, the treated to this luxurious process. Why, the entire skin resembled a piece of raw beef. To make the face perfectly smooth requires not only the removal of the hair, but also a portion of the cuticle; and a close shave means the removal of a layer of skin all around. The blood vessels thus exposed are not visible to the eye, but under the microscope each little quivering mouth holding a minute blood drop protests against such treatment. The nerve tips are also uncovered and the pores are left unpro-tected, which makes the skin tender and unhealthy. This sudden exposure of the inner layer of the skin renders a person liable to have colds, hoarseness and sore of the Peculiar Customs of the North American Redskins. When one is in the dying agony the relatives give vent to their grief in loud walls. The crying continues at intervals until death takes place, and also up to the time of burial. This cry, says a writer in the Journal of American Folk-Lore, has been by some white persons mistaken for a song or chant, but it in no way partakes of that character; it is a genuine expression of anguish and grief. The wall or cry is interspersed with terms which express the rela-tionship between the deceased and the pertionship between the deceased and the person grieving. The writer has many times heard the cry of Indian men and women, and has seen the tears flow down their cheeks. There is something truly awful in the sound when men and women together lift up their voices in the wail of grief. It is far from being like a song or chant.

When the breath has left the body of the

When the breath has left the body of the one dying, the nearest relatives, such as parent or child, brothers or sisters, husband or wife, begin with a mad zeal to strip themselves of every ornament and cut their hair, scattering shorn locks about the fire-place. The older married women who have borne children clip the hair short to the ear, while the young women part with an inch or two. Young men do not sacrifice their locks, but the older men shear theirs short. The older women pull off their leggings and moccasins and gash the flesh off their legs below the knee, lengthwise and cross-wise, till the blood flows freely. All the while they wail and call upon the dead. The young men who are near relations to the deceased remove their leggings and moccasins and pierce their legs with a sharp knife until the blood runs fast from the wounds. The old men do not scarify

With every new arrival, whether the person be of near kin or not, the wailing starts afresh. By this long-continued crying, the excitement of grief, and the pain of wounds, the relatives become exhausted before the time for burial arrives, and unable to speak above a whisper. Soon after death the corpse is placed in a sitting position facing corpse is placed in a sitting position facing the East, and dressed in gala costume, ornaments are put upon the hair and person, and sometimes the face is painted in the same manner as the Hunga in the ceremony of the sacred pipes, this is, if the deceased belonged to one of the gentes owning a sacred pipe. The "Hunga-keunzae," as this mode of painting is called, is done by painting the entire face red with vermilion; then a black line about the breadth of the ittle finger is marked across the forehead nttle finger is marked across the forehead horizontally and down both cheeks to meet a line drawn across the chin, thus forming a square. A center line starts from the one across the forehead and falls along the nose to its point. This black paint is made of charcoal and prepared fat. Men, women and children belonging to the Nenebatan (sacred pipe owners) gentes of the tribe, with a few exceptions, are painted in this manner after death. When a member of a society dies the body is taken care of by the fratermty, and the burial ceremonies are transferred from the family to the management of the society. For instance, when a member of the Mawadane Society dies the body is taken immediately after death, while the body is yet limber, to the lodge where the society is accustomed to meet. On its arrival it is placed in a sitting position, facing the East, and decked with the regalia of the society. The face of the corpse is painted in the manner in which the man while living was accustomed to paint when attending the meetings of the society. In his right hand is placed the "Ta-sha-gae," or deer's hoof rattle, which is carried only by the leader of the society. This preparation of the body is done by the relatives of the deceased and one or two members of the society. When all is complete the crier summons the members, and these wend their way to the ladge when the deed way to the

The Mawadane songs which were the favorites of the dead member are then sung and the rhythmic steps taken, while pres-ents are laid on the drum; these latter are offerings toward the funeral ceremonies. As each gift is made the crier sings forth the name of the giver, that all the village may hear of the deed. While the body lies in state in the lodge, either of the family or the society of which the deceased was a the society of which the deceased was a member, if the person or his family are held in high respect by the tribe, the young men, those between the ages of twenty and thir-ty, gather together to perform a ceremony expressive of their esteem and grief. Having stripped themselves of their garments, except a breech cloth, a loop is cut through the skin of the arm, midway between the point of the shoulder and the elbow, and the end of a willow twig, about a foot long, having the leaves on it, is thrust through the loop of skin. The blood trickles down the willow stem and spatters the hanging leaves. The young men then walk slowly to the lodge where the dead lies, and stand abreast be where the dead lies, and stand abreast before the tent entrance, singing the funeral song, each man accenting the time by striking together two short sticks of willow. All shed tears as they sing. This song is an old one, having been handed down from an unknown past. It is the only funeral song of the Omaha tribe.

At the close of the song the chief mourner, whether man or woman, steps forth from the lodge, wailing. The young men join in the wail of the mourner, who advances with uplifted hands, and passes along the line, pausing an instant at each person. This act is an expression of thanks and acknowledgment of the sympathy and honor shown. When the end of the line is reached, the mourner retraces his steps and pulls from each young man's arm the blood-stained willow twig, throwing it on the ground. Some relatives prepare a horse, the gift being an additional acknowledgment of the honor shown the dead, which is often returned to the donors after the funeral is over. The young men, after being relieved of their willows, return to their starting point, where they dress and disband. This custom was last observed about five years ago. reached, the mourner retraces his steps and about five years ago.

The burial takes place on the third or fourth day after death. The intervening period is a busy time for those having the funeral arrangements in charge. Goods are collected from the kindred, to be given to the poor at the time of the interment. The grave, never more than four feet deep, is dug by a poor man, who is paid for his labor. The body is borne upon a stretcher made by binding two cross-sticks on two poles ten or twelve feet long; tent-poles are sometimes used for this purpose. The bed of the stretcher is woven of willow wands, on which a robe is spread, the hairy side uppermost, and pillows are used to keep the sitting corpse in position, the feet being covered with robes or blankets.

THE Southern Pacific Company, realizing that Reno is fast becoming a commercial center and natural distributing point for the North and South, have given our merchants a rate on carload lots that enables them to successfully compete with Sacramento for the jobbing trade, and makes it absolutely unprofitable for small jobhere to send away for their goods. Here are some of the articles that come under the present schedule:

	Local.	Carload.
Iron	$1.14	$.75
Coal	.75	.26
Nails	1.00	-75
Barbed wire	1.14	.75
Machinery	1.14	-75
Lime	1.14	.281/6
Plaster and cement from
San Francisco		-47
Grain and all vegetables	1.14	.38
Flour	1.14	.72
Oile	1.19%	1.06

It will readily be seen that these rates give our merchants a great advantage over San Francisco dealers, and when we take into consideration the profit they realize in buying in carload lots it enables them to divide the amount saved in their purchases and the reduction in freight and thus save for the consumer a haudsome profit. Take nails for instance, buying in carload lots, when the of his election as an honorary member same article would cost them $3 if of the Maryland Tariff Reform Club, brought in a less quantity, and the writes: "The object and purpose of 25 cents per keg saved in the the club as set forth in the declaration freight gives them a profit of 50 accompanying your letter, have my hearty sympathy and support, and I believe their accomplishment is absodivide with the jobbers and consumers here and still make a handsome profit, and at the same time all other articles, and should be taken advantage of by everybody.

It is a matter of gratification to know that the South is now finding confidence and enterprise and is likely in a short time to rival the North in activity. The South Commissioners to the Berlin Conferhas increased her iron manufacturing interests more than 500 per cent. During the year 1888 the United States completed twentytwo furnaces, fourteen of which were in Alabama. Twenty-one new furnaces were in process of construction in December, 1888, and twelve of these were in Alabecome more thoroughly united, it must be a matter of great pride to all Americans that a section of the all Americans that a section of the country which has for years been laboring under great disadvantages should be building a firm commercial foundation and laying the beginning of future greatness. The demands of this country are increasing tremendously, and the means for supplying them must increase in proportion. The problem seems to be too much for the States most subject to immigration, and statesmen are thinking.

The letter says a repetition of such an incident would banish all hope of maintaining peace, and point to the continued strengthening of the Russian armaments of the western frontier as an indication of Russia's hostile intentions. with some alarm, of the struggle that must certainly come in providing for the millions. It is comforting to know that there is a large amount of potential energy to be called upon.

If the Republicans with a known majority of three or four do not organize the House and put it in working order in a single day, then they are not what their then they are not what their friends expect them to be. Of course, says the Salt Lake Tribune this pre-supposes all will be present on the first day of the session. After organization there can be a vast amount of filibustering done to defeat legislation, but for the purposes of organization alone, there ought not to be any delay. Of course a programme will have to be first agreed upon and the men selected to carry it through; but all that is politics and is worked out a thousand times every year in party conventions. It is plain duty to see that there shall be no mistake this year, for much depends on the work of Congress during this next session.

Ir is estimated that Kentucky's tobacco crop this year will amount te 300,000,000 pounds, or half of the entire crop of the | country. A Large Potato Patch

The Winnemucca Silver State says: Wheeler Lawrence of Lovelock, who here visiting friends, says that John Hill and Nels Dann have planted about sixty acres of potatoes in what, a few vears ago, was the bed of Humboldt Lake. The ground was damp a few inches below the surface when they planted the seed. The tules, which grew on the ground, had died in consequence of the drouth, and had been ourned off before the potatoes planted. The seed was put deep in the ground, which is naturally spongy, and pressed with a heavy roller. The potatoes are doing well so far, but it is questionable whether they can withstand the parching heat of the summer. No weeds grow on the ground, which will not be hoed or dis-turbed in any way while the potatoes are growing.

MOVING WEST.

Dana Perkins of Placer county, Cal., The East Losing a Majority of Its Young Men.
The Philadelphia Record in a recen editorial, calls attention to the fact that the young men of all the Eastern and Middle States for the last forty years have been going West. The drain has greatly weakened the stamina of some of the older commonwealths. Canada has also suffered from the same cause Young men constantly drift across the lakes and they seldom return. The Port Hope Guide, a Canadian newspaper, prints a list of 400 young men who have left that place—a smart town on the lakeside—to better their opportunities in the land of the free. These emigrating young men are of the same class as those who, at an earlier period, settled Ohio, Indiana, and all of the Western States proper. It is just such men who are new found as Northwestern States just about to enter the Union. They are rebuilding Seattle to-day and displaying such pluck and good sense as to gain praise from the civilized world.

BUYING A DIAMOND.

A Globe-Trotter's Peculiar Experience at Colombo.

How a Man in Search of a Rare Gem Found One—He Buys It for Four Thou-sand Rupees, Only to Learn That He Has Been Cleverly Swindled.

It was at Colombo that we met him, says a writer in Leisure Hours. He was the beau ideal of a rich young globe-trotter. We used to see him in the deep verandas of the Galle-face and Oriental hotels, surrounded by the best gem-dealers, bargaining and buying at, for them, an exhiliarating rate. He had bought rubies, he had bought sapphires, the best pearls and the finest cats-eyes to be obtained for love or money, and still his money seemed abundant. He was a gentlemanly fellow, for all that, and did not parade his wealth intentionally. Stones had a fascination for him. Probably some member of the sex that chiefly wearthem had also, that we know not. How they would look out for his return. How their eyes, and their fingers, too, would "look brighter when he came."

too, would "look brighter when he came." He had often said that he meant to look out for a really fine diamond, but naturally found that these gems are not indigenous, or even existent, upon the spicy isle. Agra or Delhi were the places. Of course there was no place like London, but he wished to possess a stone uncontaminated by pawn-brokers' fingers, uncivilized and unchris-tianized, without a flaw, and also without a pedigree; a gem which had perhaps wasted its brightness, the virgin sparkle of its many facets, in the darkness of some na-tive hoard until he caused it to be admired. worshiped, disparaged or coveted by the tashionable world of her Majesty's or Covent Garden.

There were at this time in the roads no fewer than five mail steamers, two of the Messagerie and three of the Peninsu'ar and Oriental Company. Over seventy first-class passengers had to change steamers at Colombo, and wait two days before re-embarking for Australian posts, whither most barking for Australian ports, whither most of them were bound. Dinner that evening was a pretty sight. Seldom had we seen so many English complexions and so many Parisian dresses gathered round the small tables, or such airy flounces and pretty hair waving under the influence of the punkahs.
Our gem-setting friend was dining at our table, and asking no end of questions about up-country life and the planting en-

After dinner he proposed a game of bil-liards or pool. In the only room in which play was not going on was a gentleman whom we recognized as one of the Australian passengers. There being three, he was asked to join in one game, to which he consented. Upon the first stroke he made I could not help noticing two things—first, that he handled his cue in quite an enviable manner, and that he had upon the third finger of his left hand the very finest diamond ring I had ever set eyes on. The diamond ring I had ever set eyes on. The stone seemed as large as a small nut, and the flashes of light it reflected from the gajets over the table were dazzing. The attention of our friend, it was easy to see, was riveted upon this ring, which his eyes followed round the table. The Australian passenger seemed a very pleasant man, and soon we all became more friendly.

"What a lovely ring that is you are wearing. Would you allow me to see it?" said our young friend, presently.

"Oh, with pleasure; but I am ashamed to tell you it is only paste," said its owner, slipping it off his finger and allowing us all to look at it.

to look at it. It is needless to say whose fingers soon held it, while his eyes seemed to reflect the brilliancy of the stone.

"Nonsense, man," said he, pleasantly, "I know something about diamonds and don't know when I've seen such a perfect one."

"Ah, that stone has deceived even jewelers by artificial light. I only wish it were a real diamond, for it would be worth about six hundred pounds." "It is worth every penny of it," said the other, enthusiastically. "How did you come by it, if it's not an impertinent question to the company."

"It was left me by my aunt," said the owner. "She knew it was only paste, al-though she always wore it, and I was very fond of the old lady, so I wear't, too." We all said good-night and parted, each one of us thinking a good deal about the beautiful ring. After breakfast the next day 8- and I drove over from the club to the hotel, where we had promised to "tiffin" with young "Golconda," as we called him. He was there with a bevy of native

"tambles" around him, displaying very in-ferior gems, which he refused to look at. The Australiar passengersoon strolled up, and asked my companion if he was disposed for a return match at billiards. These two had seen each other before breakfast, and young "Golconda" had backed his opinion of the diamond ring to the extent of offering four thousand rupees for it. During the game he renewed his offer, but the other said he did not wish to sell the ring at all, and especially as a reat diamond, knowing well that the stone was paste.

"Will you lend me the ring, then, and al-"Will you lend me the ring, then, and allow me to show it to a native jeweler with whom I have been dealing? If he recognizes the stone as a diamond, too, I will repeat my offer, and also will give you an open check on the bank for the amount before closing time this evening." "Look here, gentlemen," said the Australian, "of course I'll sell the stone for that, if any one can be so rash as to huy it at that price." one can be so rash as to buy it at that price; but, you see, mine will be an awkward position. I know the stone to be paste, so I can not and will not sell it as a diamond. If you, sir," turning to the would-be purchaser, "will give me in writing a state-ment to the effect that you buy the ring as a paste, all well and good; but I warn you honestly you will find that you are deceived in imagining this to be a diamond."

Young Golconda took the ring to his native connoisseur, who in a moment pronounced it to be a diamond; he also went to a European store and showed it to the proprietor. The man, after testing it, said that not only was it a diamond, but that he himself would give 4.500 rupees for it.

not only was it a diamond, but that he himself would give 4,500 rupees for it.

The bargain was struck, the requisite statement signed and the check given, all in the presence of the native jeweler, 8—, the Australian and myself; and young Golconda sat all through tiffin with the ring upon his finger. He asked us the next day to come round with him shopping, and among others we visited the store proprietor who had tested the ring. Again the man looked at it, took it to the light, shaded it from the light with one hand, again he it from the light with one hand, again he called for a file, touched it lightly and said at once:

"Sir, you've been done; this isn't the stone you brought me yesterday—this is And paste it was! Somehow the ring had

And paste it was! Somenow the ring had been changed, although we none of us remembered seeing it touched by the hands of the clever swindler who had sold it. And yet he had done it. The ring had lain on the yet he had done it. The ring had lain on the billiard table during the signing of the paper. The purchaser had paid 4,000 rupees for a ring "knowing the stone to be paste." The Australian had taken ship, undetached from his lovely diamond, but not be fore young Golconda's check had been carefully cashed.

Entirely Too Industrious.

"You say you were discharged from your former place for being too industrious?"

"Yes, ma'am." 'That's very strange.

What did you do?! "I wout down to the cellar one day and dusted the old wine bot-

ROMANCE AND BLANKETS.

Dear Mr. B. Made a Pleasant Remark and He Meant It.

Even a dry-goods store may be selected by fate as a place for a romance, as the fol-lowing story from the Brooklyn Eagle proves: In one of the big up-town dry-goods proves: In one of the big up-town dry-goods stores a spinster saleslady of twenty-five years was sighing her lonely life away in the ladies' and children's department on the third floor, while a widower sales-gen tleman, aged forty, was becoming gray and bald with the care of three children among the blankets down in the basement. Was it the subtle but strong power of affinity, or was it only family necessities that drew those lonely hearts together? Who can tell! Neither will ever forget that day, that hour, three weeks ago, when they first gazed into each other's eyes. He had come up-stairs to her counter.

"What can I show you?"
"Children's stockings, please."

"What numbers ?" "Four, five and a half and seven. Two pairs each, please." "Walk this way. Now, how do you like

"I always get that kind."
"But this kind wears much better. Lovely day, isn't it? Quite a family, eh? Yours? Why doesn't your wife do the buying? Oh! Cash! No, I won't forget the discount. What department are you in? Blankets ought to be soft. Oh, yes; I love children.

What name, please?"
"You're a girl after my own heart," said the widower, as he walked away with the

"A girl after my own heart." These words rang in the lonely saleslady's ears. Like the parson who kissed the fiddler's wife, "she couldna sleep for thinkin' o't." The next day she sent a boy with a note to the blanket department in the basement. The note said:

Mr. B. wrote back saying he meant nothing. Next Miss M. visited the blanket de partment. She wanted a "comforter." Of course Mr. B. waited on her.
"Where shall I send this, Miss M.? Yes?

Is that your correct address?"
"You can easily find out if you call." "May I call?" "Certainly. What did you mean by what you said up in my department?"

"Nothing." "You must have meant something." "Well, maybe I did."
"I think you are just terrible. Such short acquaintances, too."

The first visit settled it. Cupid bagged them both. They combined their respective gentility and were made one last Sunday. The widower's hair has become a rich, glossy brown again, and his two-dollar-and-a-half smile is the most bewitching to be found anywhere in his line of business. ness. As to the "girl after my own heart," the sacred curtains of home now conceal her, but the sound of her chirping can be heard for half a mile.

THE WESTERN SOLDIER.

Some of His Accomplishments as a Critic Cleverly Described. Captain Henry King, of the St. Louis Globe-Democrat, contributes to the Century a paper on "The Western Soldier," from which we make this extract: "They assumed a right of criticism towards their regimental and company officers that was almost as free as that exercised by the average voter with regard to political officials. In some instances they did injustice, no doubt; but, generally speaking, their esti mates were sagacious and proper. They had no patience with pretense of any description, and they were quick to detect it. Thus, if a Colonel invested his headquarters with unnecessary pomp and formality. as a Colonel was occasionally known to do, they would nudge one another in passing and exchange looks and comments that rarely failed to produce a change. On one occasion a Lieutenant-Colonel, riding out to battle, forfeited the esteem of his regimen by holding a picture of his wife in his hand and gazing fixedly upon it; but he after-wards restored himself to favor by a daring act that cost him two ugly wounds. Another officer of the same rank, on a toilsome march, gained a cheer by alighting from his horse and giving his place in the saddle to a limping soldier; but when the Major at his side did the same thing there was no response. The first had performed a kindness without prompting, while the second was a mere imitator. It was by such distinctions that officers were the sharp watch that was being kept upon them, and admonished that they were mortal as well as those who wore no shoulde straps. Now and then the instruction took a more amusing turn, as when a Captain noted for his conceit, undertook to lecture his company upon the necessity of increased respect for officers, and was checked by a droll fellow who said, with a grin and an extravagant salute: 'Cap, I used to know you when you made harness. HEY WERE ALL HANKS.

But They Were Muscular Fellows and Didn't Mean to Be Guyed. In the Western Reserve about eight out of ten men you meet are called Henry, or, rather, christened Henry and called Hank, according to the Topical Talker of the Pitts-

A newspaper man who is given to amusing himself in eccentric ways was once at a loss for a hearty laugh while traveling toward Cleveland over the Lake Shore railroad. He and his companion knew that about three hours of accommodation-train weariness lay before them, and though they had a good many broad smiles in a quart bottle they desired something to shatter the

An idea struck the newspaper man first At the next station the train stopped at there was the usual crowd of gawky rustics assembled to see the train come in and go out. As the train was moving out the two travelers in search of fun raised the car windows, and, leaning out with an air of intense eagerness, shouted loudly over and over again: "Hank! Hullo, Hank!" Nearly all the men sprang forward, and as they did so the igoose travelers fell back as they did so the jocose travelers fell back into their seats, laughing immoderately. They repeated this mild practical joke at ral stations with the same results, and then the laugh went over to the other side. They were leaving a small town, and making the "Hanks" in the crowd go through the usual evolutions, when the engineer, for some reason or other, stopped the train. The jokers were still shouting "Hank! Hank!" when the cars came to a standstill. Several of the "Hanks" came up to the car been called. One very big farmer guessed the meaning of the whole business, and tried hard to reach the head of the newspaper man with his fist. The crowd was about to board the cars and take vengeance window, and wanted to know why they had on their tormentors when the conductor started the train in a hurry and pulled the latter out of danger. There was no more crying of "Hank!" after that.

Where Is the West?

Where is the West, anyway? Here are the Chicago papers commenting on the Western ideas of justice that obtain in Omaha, while doubtless Omaha locates the West in Montana or Colorado. And when you get to these localities you find somehow or other that the West has eluded you altogether, while the Pacific slope looms pefore you as the ultims thule, Where Is the West?
